

July 2007

ROMANTIC SMOKER BLOWS RING ROUND DINING BAN

For one romantic London businessman, the smoking ban was not going to stop him from enjoying a much desired cigarette at the end of a romantic meal with his wife. The unnamed entrepreneur, frustrated at being unable to book a smoking table at his favourite London eateries, has instead splashed out several hundred pounds on an anniversary meal to remember, to be cooked in his own home by James McIntosh of food and catering consultancy Whisk.

McIntosh, who has worked with a number of top celebrity chefs in the past, including Antony Worrall Thompson and Marcus Wareing was amused by the novel request:

“While I don’t smoke myself, I understand that many smokers believe that a meal is only complete when finished off with a cigarette.

Diners can now overcome the smoking ban by transferring restaurant service to their own homes

“My client took a creative approach to wining and dining his partner, and we were able to provide a unique meal for them with plenty of strong flavours which were not marred by his post-meal smoke. I’m sure more smokers will opt for the personal touch as the smoking ban kicks in.”

For details of Whisk’s Private Dining Service, please go to <http://www.whisk.biz/dining.htm>.

Ends